About Science Academies

The coveted three science Academies namely, Indian Academy of Sciences, Bangalore, India National Academy of Sciences, Allahabad and Indian National Science Academy, New Delhi, were established during 1930s in India with the objective of imparting quality education, promoting science and technology, harnessing scientific knowledge for the benefit of mankind and national wellbeing. They were considered as apex bodies of Indian Scientists. They establish linkages with national and international bodies and offer opinions on national issues after due debates and deliberations. To promote the quality of research all the Science Academies have instituted several activities with the unstinted support from the fellows of all academies representing all the disciplines of Science and Technology. The Academies have grown in strength and popularity by organizing several programmes like lecture workshops and conferences and provide suitable platform for young and enthusiastic students to interact with eminent scientist and motivating them to opt for research career.
